BILL DROWNED THE BEAR PAYNE'S "HOME, SWEET HOME"

AND CAPTURED ITS CUBS, BUT HE CAUGHT NO TROUT.

Next Day He Killed Twelve Rattlesnakes, but Returned Troutless-Third Day He Cancht a Hundred Trout.

From the New York Sun. "I went up into the Stony Valley country last spring to see if I could get some G! the good early trout fishing I had heard so much about," said John Gilbert, the traveling groceryman, "and I was told that they always waited for Bill Dicky to start the always waited for Eill Dicky to start the trout season up there. Bill, they said, was the boss trout fisherman of the Stony Valley waters, and until he took to catching some everybody else stayed home. Bill huan't brought any in yet, so it wasn't much use of my going out, they said, but Bill had sone out that day, and I would know as soon as he got in whether the season had opened yet. Bill got in along toward night, and it seemed to me that he locked rumpled and skin broken.

"Well, said I, did you get any?"

"Only three, said he.

"Three, said I, that is rather a slim lot of trout for you to own up to, ain't it?

"Yes, said Bill, but them three wasn't front. Them three was bear."

"I wasn't expecting him to say anything about bear, and so I didn't have anything ready to say back right away, and before I could think of anything Bill had begun about the bears.

"I hadn't had no kind o' luck, said he, and I was feelin' ugly, but for all that I wouldn't have pitched into the bear that came along just then if the blamed thing hadn't made me lose a two pound trout, the first light I had hooked. It was at Anvil Rock hole. The bite I got was a souzer, and the trout sprung out o' the water. trout season up there. Bill, they said, was and tried to throw me and fit like a tiger to git a snift or two o' wind, but I wouldn't let him, and it wasn't long before I had drowned him deader than a pickled pig's foot. I hadn't a darn thing ag'inst the bear personally, but he spiled my fishin' an' lost me a two pounder. My fishipole was broke to flinders, too.

"I pulled the bear out o' the creek and was gettlin' ready to cut him up, when I heerd a great scratchin' and whinin' and lookin' up where it came from I see two cubs workin' their way down the side o' the ledge to'ards me and the dead ugar. Then: I knowed that the dead bear wasn't entitled to be called he, 'cause he was a she, and the two cubs was her young uns. I tethered 'em up and they're down at my shanty now lively as kittens. I s'pose the old bear had clim the tree at top o' the rocks and was out on a limb to git a better look at me when it broke, and dowa she come. I hope to goodness I won't be bethered with no piaguey bear to-morrow, 'cause I want this trout season to open. It's a little behindhand, as it is.

"Bill went fishing next day, and I awaited the result with some anxiety, for I wanted to go after some myself. I went over to Bill's that evening.

"What luck, Bill." said I.

"Got twelve," said he.

"Not bears I hope, said I.

"No, 'said Bill, 'not bears this time.'

"Well,' said I, 'twelve trout ain't so bad if they're big ones.'

"These twelve is old sockers,' said Bill, 'But they ain't trout. They're rattlesmakes.'

"Thunder,' I exclaimed.

"These twelve is old sockers, said bill,
"But they ain't trout. They're rattlesmakes."
"Thunder,' I exclaimed.
"Yes,' said Bill. 'Rattlesmakes seemed to be havin' a gatherin' o' some kind today. I found one layin' by the side o' the creek, just as I got rigged up to fish.
"The creek just as I got rigged up to fish." day. I found one layin by the side of the creek, just as I got rigged up to fish. It was right in my way and I kicked its head off. I fished a little ways and come up to two more big rattlers that seemed to be standin' guard or somethin', for they stuck up their bristles and shook their buttons and calculated that I wasn't goin' no further down that creek, not if they knowed it. The consequence was that I had to fight them out and settle them with a club. I kept on meetin' with rattlers every little ways, and after I had killed the twelfth one, and looked ahead and see snakes on guard every rod of so as far as my eyes could foller, I concluded to let 'em have their holiday out, whatever it mowt a-been, and I quit and come home. I think maybe I'll go out and try the creek again to-morrow and open the season.'

"I found out that Bill did go out next and so I called to see him after supper."

"Well, Bill,' said I, 'how did you come out to-day?"

"Well, Bill,' said I, 'how did you come gusted, 'if it was one bear it was snough. If it was one trout it isn't worth speaking about, and I guess I'll go home to-morrow.'

"That one is a trout,' said Bill. But that one is one hundred. And they're purtier than peacocks!"

"Sure enough Bill had an even one hundred beauties. There was a two pounder purtier than peacocks!"

"Sure enough Bill had an even one hundred beauties. There was a two pounder among em and iots of one pounders. The lot weighed fifty-two pounds.
"The season's open, said Bill.
"And it was, sure enough, I had a week's fishing such as I never saw the like of."

Belongings of Famous People.

Most of the articles that once belonged to famous people are now scattered all over the world. The wedding dress of that unfortunate queen, Marie Antoinette, was discovered not long ago in the ancient church of Kenuweg, near Vienna.

A piano which Napoleon Bonaparte had made for the Empress Josephine, in 1885, in now in a London showroom. The cradie of Emperor Napoleon occupied the drawing room of the late Mrs. Van Rensselaer Cruger, being heaped with flowers. It is not a noticeable piece of furniture, being made of some dark wood, and having no particular ornamentation.

The mirror used by General Washington has hung in a house in Warrenton, Va., for the last thirty-five years. The frame is of silt, and at the top, in a background of black and white enamel, is his coat of arms in gold, with his motto—"Exitus acta probat." The mirror was bought at a sale of personal effects of Lawrence Washington, a grandnephew of the great general.

House Where the Author of the Famous American Ballad Lived 180 Years Ago. At Easthampton, L. I., there is a modest little cottage nestling in a clump of trees, just off the magnificent boulevard which serves as the principal road of the town. it stands there antique and sedate, in proximity to the pretentious modern man-sions of contemporaneous men of wealth and, like its present owner and tenant, seems to be oblivious to the world.

The house was the birthplace of the au-thor of "Home, Sweet Home," and in it John Howard Payne lived. It is 150 years old, and, with one exception, is the oldest structure in the old town. Loving hands have kept the cherished dwelling in a good state of preservation and there are no signs of time's ravages to mar the sym-metry of the house. A few changes of proximity to the pretentious modern man minor importance have been made in the building since the author lived there, but, generally speaking, the house is the same as it was in the past century.

The side of the house faces the roadway, its peculiar long and short drop eaves being typical of the ancient style of architecture which prevailed 100 years ago and which is in popular favor again with men of artistic taste for summer homes.

The interior economy of the Payne cottage remains unchanged. The large drawing room, dining room and kitchen on the main floor are the same to-day as when main floor are the same to-day as when Payne occupied them. One might almost say that the furniture and hangings are the same, but that would be presumptu-

The present owner of the property is Captain Henry Mulford, and, as is fitting, he is the oldest resident of Easthampton, being 88 years old. He lives in the old Payne house with his daughter and being 8 years old. He lives in the old Payne house with his daughter and her family, and is happy in the distinction the house brings him. He dresses in the fashion of a forgotten generation. His waistcoat is of heavy black satin, cut low and double breasted. His frock is of black broadcloth, made with ample skirts, and his shirt and collar are of the loose and fluffy kind that were worn by our statesmen in the days of the war with Mexico. But every garment is faultless and his attre is as precise as is his courtesy.

He takes pleasure in showing visitors about the grounds and into the famous old house. He points out the old fireplace in the "settin' room" where Payne toasted his slippered fect on the androns and exhibits many bits of antique decoration that must have been masterpleces in their day.

"i), where are you going, my pretty maid?"
"To call a policeman, sir." she said.

So don't try to work it another time."
